Chuck Dodson (1908 – 1993) was an architect turned sculptor. Known as one of the more colorful artists in the Miami area, he was for a time resident artist at the Grove House in Coconut Grove. His small, often erotic sculptures sometimes featured his wife Danielle, a retired ballerina. He is more famous for the mosaic murals he created for the Orange Bowl Stadium (demolished in 2008) and the bas relief sculptures he created in plaster and concrete for the Miami Dupont Plaza Hotel (demolished in 2005). He gained national prominence in the 1970's when Playboy Magazine featured him in an article.
